State's best players headed for Madison

By PEGGY VLEREBOME
Special to the Courier

A burst of tourism and three days of community events are expected next week when the North-South All-Star Series will bring 50 of the state's best high school baseball players to Madison.

Families of some of the players and other visitors are expected to be in Madison, along with scouts and baseball fans. Visit Madison estimates that 2,500 people will come to Madison for the Series and shop, eat and stay while they are here.

"This is going to have a huge economic impact on our community," said Sarah Prasil, marketing director at VisitMadison.

"The whole idea is to showcase Madison," said Tim Armstrong, leader of the effort to have the Series at Madison Consolidated High School, where he is the baseball coach. Hanover College also will get exposure that could help with recruiting, he said.

With the North-South Series over the weekend and the Futures Games preceding them earlier in the week, baseball fans will be able to watch seven baseball games played by young men who could be the college and perhaps professional players of the future.

The community events will include a free party on the riverfront Saturday night.

The first event, which will be free and open to the public on Friday, June 21, will be a home run derby in which the North team and the South team each will choose their three best hitters to hit home runs.

The derby is being revived this year after being absent for several Series. The home run derby will be at 4 p.m. at Gary O'Neal Field at Madison Consolidated High School.

After the home run derby, there will be a banquet — open to the public — for the players, parents and coaches at 7 p.m. Friday, June 21 at Brown Campus Center on the Hanover College campus. Reservations must be made and cost $25 a person.

To make reservations, contact Kevin Hannon by text to (219) 242-5855 or by email at khannon@knox.k12.in.us . Payment will be by cash or check at the door. Hannon's "soft" deadline for reservations is Friday this week, but all reservations must be made by noon Tuesday, June 18.

The Indiana High School Baseball Coaches Association, which has sponsored the North-South All-Star Series since 1975, will announce its Player of the Year at the banquet. The banquet speaker will be Indiana University head baseball coach Jeff Mercer, who just completed his first year of coaching at IU with a 37-23 record.

Hannon said that this is the first time in the five years he has been involved with the banquet planning that it has been open to the public.

The All-Stars have all just graduated from high school. Before the All-Star Series events, the coaches association will have the Futures Games (formerly the Junior Showcase) on Wednesday, June 19 at Hanover College for baseball players who will be high school juniors in the next school year; a few sophomores could be selected if they were specially nominated.

With college and professional scouts in the Hanover stands, the 60 Futures Games players will demonstrate their skills at their positions starting around 8 a.m. and then be divided into four teams. Around 11:45 a.m., two games will be played at the same time, followed by a switch of opponents for a second set of games played at the same time. The public can attend the skills demonstrations and the games free.

The 50 All-Stars and the five coaches for each team will arrive on Friday and will stay on the Hanover College campus.

Their games will be played at Gary O'Neal Field at Madison Consolidated High School. Admission will be $5 each day. Children wearing their Little League, Madison Parks or Madison Baseball Club uniforms will get in free. There will be concessions. Signs at the Clifty Drive entrance to the high school will direct motorists to parking.

Again with scouts joining fans and families in the stands, the All-Stars will play two nine-inning games Saturday starting at noon, with the second game beginning 45 minutes after the end of the first game, and a nine-inning game Sunday at noon. High school baseball games usually are seven innings, but longer games will give more players time on the field.

During the games, a bouncy house will be set up near the ball diamond for children.

Saturday evening on Madison's waterfront, the public and the visitors will get a chance to mingle with the All-Stars at a free party from 6:30 to 9:30 p.m. Food will be provided for the players, but there will be two food trucks and an ice cream truck for the public to buy food.

There will be lawn games such as cornhole and a radio station playing music. Madison resident John Morgan will give the players a river tour on his large boat.

"We want to treat them like all-stars," Armstrong said, and at the same time "have a small-town atmosphere."

Armstrong, a Madison native, has been the baseball coach at Madison Consolidated High School for three years, the second time he has been the Cubs coach. A graduate of Shawe Memorial High School, he also coached baseball there and for American Legion Post 9 teams. A city police officer for 24 years, he resigned to be Madison's mayor from 2008 through 2011. He currently is with the Jefferson County Sheriff's Department, working for MCS as a resource officer.

Shortly after Armstrong went back to MCHS as the baseball coach, the coaches, Mike Modisett and others decided to try to land the Series for

Music at Mansion this weekend

By CHARLIE ROHLFING

The first time I went to a Lanier concert a couple of years ago, I was woefully unprepared, I must admit. My wife and I just took a couple of bag chairs and a small cooler, like we normally would for any outdoor show.

But that's not de rigueur at the Lanier, oh no. Pretty soon we see people coming in with nice comfortable padded chairs and small tables with white tablecloths. We see picnic baskets full of cheese and bread and other delights. Wine and beer bottles start appearing on the tables, with glasses clinked in polite greeting. My wife and I were clearly amateurs at this party.

"We have this beautiful jewel of a mansion in our town's midst, and it's fabulous," says Kate Brown, current president of the Friends of Lanier organization. "People should use and enjoy it as much as possible.

"We encourage people to bring in whatever they want to make themselves comfortable and enjoy the evening. We've even been known to have a community pitch-in table where folks bring dishes and share food. It's just the nicest, friendliest way to relax and spend an evening."

The shows take place on the north lawn with the mansion as a backdrop. This year's first show is this Saturday, June 15, at 7 p.m. and features the Walnut Street Blues Band out of Louisville. All shows are free.

Guilty plea ahead in Jeffersonville shop owner's slaying

Indiana

JEFFERSONVILLE — A man charged with murder and armed robbery in the Oct. slaying of a businessman in Jeffersonville has entered a plea agreement in the case. Court records show Antonio J. McRae, 35, filed the agreement to plead guilty last week. His attorney, Dave Mosley, confirmed Monday details of the agreement, which could bring 45-65 years in prison and needs approval from a judge. McRae was arrested in Dec. in connection with the fatal shooting of Praful Patel, 49. McRae had told reporters he had planned to rob Patel but not to kill him, and that he intended to plead guilty. Patel was killed while working at the Stop N Go convenience store that he and his wife owned in Jeffersonville.

IPS pays $600K in sex abuse suits

INDIANAPOLIS — Indianapolis Public Schools paid almost $600,000 to settle three lawsuits in a case involving a former school counselor who was accused of having sex with students. The Indianapolis Star obtained the financial details of the settlements through public records requests. The school board approved them nearly two weeks ago without disclosing the amount. The suits arose from allegations that former counselor Shana Taylor had sex with two teenage students while working for the district in 2015 and 2016. Taylor was sentenced to six years of home detention in 2017 after pleading guilty to three felony counts of dissemination of matter harmful to minors. Prosecutors agreed to drop the other charges against her, which included child seduction and contributing to the delinquency of a minor. Taylor wasn't required to register as a sex offender, but she agreed to relinquish her teaching license. Court records show at least 12 district officials knew of the allegations against Taylor nearly a week before they were reported to the Indiana Department of Child Services. Indiana law mandates anyone who learns of suspected abuse or neglect to immediately report it to the child services agency or law enforcement. Two district officials were fired in the aftermath of case. They sued the district and school board members, alleging they were wrongfully terminated and denied due process.

First gay pride festival Saturday in Richmond

RICHMOND — A gay pride festival set for this weekend in Richmond will become what's believed to be the first such event in the city. Rainbow Richmond is organizing the event on Saturday, June 15, which will feature live music, speakers from the community and a family-friendly drag show. The Palladium-Item reported that no entry fee will be charged for the festival, which will be at Jack Elstro Plaza in the city's downtown area. But Rainbow Richmond is seeking donations to help with its efforts to revive the local group, which focuses on LGBT issues. Festival organizer Benjamin Guard said the event will offer "a safe space to everyone to be able to be themselves."

State inmate's death probed as homicide

BUNKER HILL — Indiana State Police say investigators suspect foul play in the death of an inmate at the Miami Correctional Facility. Police say prison staff found Lannie Morgan, 70, of South Bend unresponsive in his cell about 9:40 a.m. Monday, June 10. An ambulance was summoned for Morgan, but he died before reaching a local hospital. Police are treating the death as a homicide. An autopsy has been conducted and results are pending. Morgan had been incarcerated within the Indiana Department of Correction since December 2011.

Indy's WTHR among stations sold by Wolfe

COLUMBUS, Ohio — The Dispatch Broadcast Group is selling its television and radio stations — including NBC affiliate WTHR-TV in Indianapolis — in a $535-million deal marking the end of the Wolfe family media dynasty that's influenced Ohio's capital city for more than a century. Properties sold to TEGNA, of Tysons, Virginia, in the deal also include WBNS-TV and WBNS-AM and WBNS-FM radio in Columbus, Ohio. TEGNA announced the broadcast sale Tuesday, June 11. It follows sale of The Columbus Dispatch newspaper to GateHouse Media for $47 million in 2015. Then-publisher John F. Wolfe died in 2016 at 72. TEGNA is one of two publicly traded companies created when Gannett Company split in 2015. It owns 49 television stations in 41 markets and is the largest group owner of NBC-affiliated stations and the second-largest group owner of CBS-affiliated stations.

3 children in Amish carriage crash identified

ALGANSEE TOWNSHIP, Michigan — A funeral home has identified three children who died in southern Michigan after the Amish horse-drawn carriage in which they were riding was struck by a driver accused of being drunk. Beams Funeral Home of Fremont, Indiana, identified them as Lillian Graber, 6, Moses Graber, 4, and Jacob Graber, 2. Lillian and Jacob died at Friday's crash scene and Moses died at a hospital. Police say they were among five children who along with their parents were ejected in the crash. The mother and another child were seriously injured. The pickup driver, Tyler Frye, 21, was charged with drunken driving causing death and serious injury. The crash happened in Branch County's Algansee Township, near Michigan's boundary with Indiana and home to Amish communities.

Education aid expanded for soldiers, reservists

FORT CAMPBELL — An education assistance program has been expanded to include soldiers at Fort Campbell as well as Army Reserve and National Guard soldiers throughout Kentucky. The Army Credentialing Assistance Program provides funding for training and classes that lead to certificates, licensures and credentials in more than 1,600 occupations. Testing of the program began last year at Fort Hood, Texas, and it is now available at Fort Campbell and to Kentucky National Guard and Reserve soldiers who live in and actively drill with a unit in Kentucky. Soldiers may receive up to $4,000 a year in combined tuition assistance and credentialing assistance funds. The program is planned to expand again next year to include soldiers throughout the Army. The program is administered under Army Human Resources Command at Fort Knox.

New web portal created for foster care kids

FRANKFORT — The Kentucky Cabinet for Health and Family Services has set up a new website for transition age youth in the foster care system. The cabinet said the new website is part of a rebranding project for the state's independent living program for youths in the system. The web-based portal — www.kyrise.ky.gov — will be accessible to the public beginning June 24. It is called Kentucky RISE, which stands for Resources for Independence, Success and Empowerment. It will contain a link for foster youth to complete an application and receive vital records, like a birth certificate. The portal also will have a link to a summer employment initiatives. More than 80 employers with various opportunities have signed on for this year's program.

Home, pharmacy to pay $13M in judge's death

LOUISVILLE — A nursing home and pharmacy agreed to give nearly $13 million to the family of a retired judge who died after they say he was not given his necessary medication. The Courier-Journal reported both companies and the judge's estate came to an agreement Monday, June 10, one day before the dispute was set to go to trial. Retired Jefferson County Circuit Judge Dan Schneider died in 2013. Attorneys for Schneider's estate say the judge received antibiotics at a hospital two weeks before moving to the Louisville campus of the Masonic Homes of Kentucky. The attorneys say Schneider was supposed to receive antibiotics from Med Care Pharmacy for four more weeks at the nursing home, but he never received a single dose. He later died.

Utility approved for rate adjustments

FRANKFORT — An eastern Kentucky electric provider is restructuring its rates, but the adjustments won't increase monthly bills for an average customer. The Kentucky Public Service Commission is allowing Jackson Energy Cooperative Corp. to increase the monthly customer charge while decreasing the cost per kilowatt-hour of electricity. The electric co-op serves 51,000 residential customers in about 14 counties in eastern Kentucky. The commission said that under the new rate structure, below-average monthly consumption will result in slightly higher bills, while above-average usage will produce slightly lower bills. The PSC also said the change will benefit low-income customers who receive assistance in paying their electric bills.

WWII veteran receives French Legion of Honor

WILMORE — A 95-year-old World War II veteran in Kentucky has been awarded the French Legion of Honor, that country's highest distinction. Alvin H. Perry of Wilmore received the medal Friday in a crowded room at the Thomson-Hood Veterans Center in Wilmore for his participation in the liberation of France. Consul General of France to the Midwest Guillaume LaCroix said it was an honor to thank Perry. The Kentucky Department of Veterans Affairs said Perry was a member of the 331st Infantry Regiment, 83rd Infantry Division and landed at Omaha Beach on June 18, 1944. He participated in the Battle of Normandy, where he was wounded in action and captured. He was held captive in Germany and Bavaria for 10 months.

Early release in classmate's shooting

BOWLING GREEN — A former Western Kentucky University student who drunkenly shot his friend and was sentenced to four years in prison for reckless homicide is being released after only 125 days. A Kentucky judge granted Peter Gall, 22, a kind of early release meant for first-time offenders convicted of low-level felonies. Gall said he didn't mean to kill his friend and fellow WKU student, Alex Davis, in September 2017. He testified that in his drunken state, he "decided just to try and scare" him. He said he "began to jab and mess with him. That's when the gun went off." Judge John Grise faulted Gall's "poor judgment, immaturity and alcohol" while Davis' parents said nothing can bring back their son.

Wounded deputy feared police over 'bad guys'

LOUISVILLE — A deputy shot and paralyzed by police during an arrest said he was more concerned about getting shot by the inexperienced officers than the "actual bad guys." The Lexington Herald-Leader reported Scott County Deputy Jaime Morales' concerns are detailed in a state police file on the September shooting. The newspaper recently obtained the file through a public records request. Morales was shot while assisting other departments arrest Florida robbery suspect Edward Reynolds, who was armed and killed. An investigation found he never fired his weapon. Morales told investigators that the officers didn't have the tactical experience to be at the high-stress scene. The case file said that state police investigators won't say which officer shot Morales without studying the bullet, which is still lodged in Morales spine.

Report finds inconsistent policies

LOUISVILLE — A new report says Kentucky counties have "wildly inconsistent" bail practices. The Courier Journal reported the study was released Tuesday by the Berea-based Kentucky Center for Economic Policy, a nonprofit research group. The reports also said that where people live determines whether they will stay in jail because of high bail. The study found that the number of defendants released before trial last year without having to post cash bail ranged from 5 percent in McCracken County to 68 percent in Martin County. It also found that only 17 percent of defendants in Wolfe County could afford to pay cash bail when it was required compared to 99 percent in Hopkins County. Study author Ashley Spalding said defendants "should not have their freedom contingent upon their income or where they are arrested."

Southern Baptists meet; endorse steps against sex abuse

By JAY REEVES and DAVID CRARY
Associated Press

BIRMINGHAM, Alabama — Confronting an unprecedented sex-abuse crisis, delegates at the Southern Baptist Convention's national meeting voted Tuesday to make it easier to expel churches that mishandle abuse cases.

The Rev. J.D. Greear, president of the nation's largest Protestant denomination, said the SBC faced a "defining moment" that would shape the church for generations to come.

"This is not a distraction from the mission," Greear said of the fight against sex abuse. "Protecting God's children is the mission of the church."

The SBC's meeting comes as U.S. Catholic bishops convene in Baltimore to address a widening sex-abuse crisis in the Catholic Church. The Southern Baptist Convention says it had 14.8 million members in 2018, down about 192,000 from the previous year. The Catholic Church is the largest denomination in the U.S., with 76.3 million members as of last year — down from 81.2 million in 2005.

Sex abuse already was a high-profile issue at the SBC's 2018 national meeting in Dallas, after which Greear formed an advisory group to draft recommendations on how to confront the problem. Greear was unanimously re-elected to a second term on Tuesday.

Pressure on the SBC has intensified in recent months, due in part to articles by the Houston Chronicle and San Antonio Express-News asserting that hundreds of Southern Baptist clergy and staff have been accused of sexual misconduct over the past 20 years, including dozens who returned to church duties, while leaving more than 700 victims with little in the way of justice or apologies.

Stung by the allegations, SBC leaders forwarded to the delegates meeting in Birmingham a proposed amendment to the SBC constitution making clear that an individual church could be expelled for mishandling or covering up sex-abuse cases. It was endorsed by the delegates, as was a similar proposal designating racism as grounds for expulsion.

Delegates also voted to assign the SBC's credentials committee to review claims against churches with regard to sexual abuse and racial discrimination.

Even before this week's meeting, some action had been taken on recommendations from Greear's study committee.

For example, a nine-member team developed a training curriculum to be used by churches and seminaries to improve responses to abuse.

The team includes a psychologist, a former prosecutor, a detective, and attorney and abuse survivor Rachael Denhollander, the first woman to go public with charges against sports doctor Larry Nassar ahead of the prosecution that led to a lengthy prison sentence.

The study group also is considering new requirements for background checks of church leaders, and it is assessing options for a database listing credibly accused abusers, though Baptist leaders say that process has been difficult because of legal issues.

Outside the convention hall, about two dozen demonstrators handed out flyers to Southern Baptists and held up signs with messages including: "End church abuse cover-ups" and "Be like Jesus: Take abuse seriously & love victims."

Some participants at a rally said they are abuse survivors and have been attending denominational meetings for years. First-time attendee Jules Woodson spoke through tears as she described being abused sexually by a Southern Baptist minister.

"He remains in the pulpit. I've reached out to him personally and he refuses to respond. And so I'm asking the SBC to hold him accountable," said Woodson, of Colorado Springs, Colorado.

Ahead of the meeting, there was a surge of debate related to the Southern Baptist Convention's doctrine of "complementarianism" that calls for male leadership in the home and the church.

Particularly contentious is a widely observed prohibition on women preaching in Southern Baptist churches. Those recently challenging that policy include Beth Moore, a prominent author and evangelist who runs a Houston-based ministry for women.

"What I want to say to my own family of Southern Baptists: Our family is sick. We need help," Moore said at a panel discussion Monday night. "We have this built-in disesteem for women and it's got to change."

A female delegate to the SBC meeting, Alex Hebert, said she was pleased with the denomination's overall effort to address sexual misconduct.

"I think there's a huge push toward repentance and looking into what we can do to prevent that from happening and to prevent people who have been participating in that" from being part of church leadership, said Hebert, holding her 1-year-old son in her arms.

Hebert, 26, said she is very comfortable in her own Southern Baptist congregation, Calvary Baptist Church in Kemp, Texas, where her husband is head pastor.

Nathan Morton, a pastor from South Carolina, said he knows sexual misconduct is a problem based on personal experience, but he trusts the SBC's current leadership to address the problem.

"I had staff members that were abused by ministers when they were younger. Ministers got shuttled from one place to the other. Now there's some positive, proactive issues and resolutions coming up that's made us a greater and stronger denomination," said Morton, 56.

Jimmy Carter, after hip surgery, goes back to teaching Sunday school

By SUDHIN THANAWALA
Associated Press

ATLANTA — Former U.S. President Jimmy Carter talked about his recent health setback and his conversation with President Donald Trump, as he returned to teaching Sunday school in Georgia for the first time since breaking his hip.

Carter told people gathered at the Maranatha Baptist Church in Plains that he and his wife, Rosalynn, have nursing care at home and are doing fine. He thanked those present for their prayers and good wishes.

The 94-year-old Carter broke his hip last month at his home when he fell while leaving to go turkey hunting. He subsequently had hip replacement surgery.

The former first lady also was hospitalized around the same time for what Carter said was initially thought to be a stroke, but turned out to be less serious.

A devout Christian, Carter regularly teaches Sunday school in Plains, drawing hundreds of visitors for each session. But he had to cancel plans to teach after hip surgery.

People began gathering at midnight to hear Carter, and by 8 a.m., a line wrapped around the church despite pouring rain, the Atlanta Journal-Constitution reported.

"We wanted to pay tribute for all of the work he has done," Glenda Morris-Robinson told the newspaper. "It is so wonderful to see a true servant leader. He was remarkable."

Morris-Robinson, a pediatrician from Atlanta, drove down with her daughter, Gabriella, who flew in from New York City just for the occasion.

Carter said he recently wrote to Trump to explain how the Carter administration had tried to address economic friction with Japan, and Trump called him.

"He was very gracious," Carter said, adding Trump expressed his appreciation for Carter's letter as well as admiration for the former president.

"The main purpose of his call was to say very frankly to me on a private line that the Chinese were getting way ahead of the United States in many ways," Carter said.

He said he told Trump the U.S. has been in constant war for years, spending trillions of dollars, while China has invested in projects such as high speed rail that benefit its people.

In March, Carter became the longest-living chief executive in U.S. history, exceeding the lifespan of former President George H.W. Bush, who died Nov. 30 at the age of 94 years, 171 days.

The milestone came despite a cancer diagnosis more than three years earlier. Carter disclosed in 2015 that he had melanoma that had spread to his liver and brain. He received treatment for seven months until scans showed no sign of the disease.

Waco church leaves Baptist General

By RHIANNON SAEGERT
Waco Tribune-Herald

WACO, Texas (AP) — University Baptist Church has formally withdrawn from the Baptist General Convention of Texas after the Waco church's leadership voted to allow same-sex marriage.

The Waco Tribune-Herald reported that while the withdrawal was voluntary, the last Waco church to leave the convention was expelled after it changed its policies to formally welcome LGBTQ members. University Baptist's vote was twofold.

Leaders took one vote to allow its pastors to decide individually whether they would perform the marriages and a second vote to open the church building to same-sex ceremonies. The church announced its decision May 21 on its blog.

The Baptist General Convention of Texas received and accepted a letter of voluntary withdrawal from University Baptist late last month, convention spokesman Joshua Minatrea said.

About 70 churches in Waco are affiliated with the convention, giving them access to scholarships for members, as well as other resources.

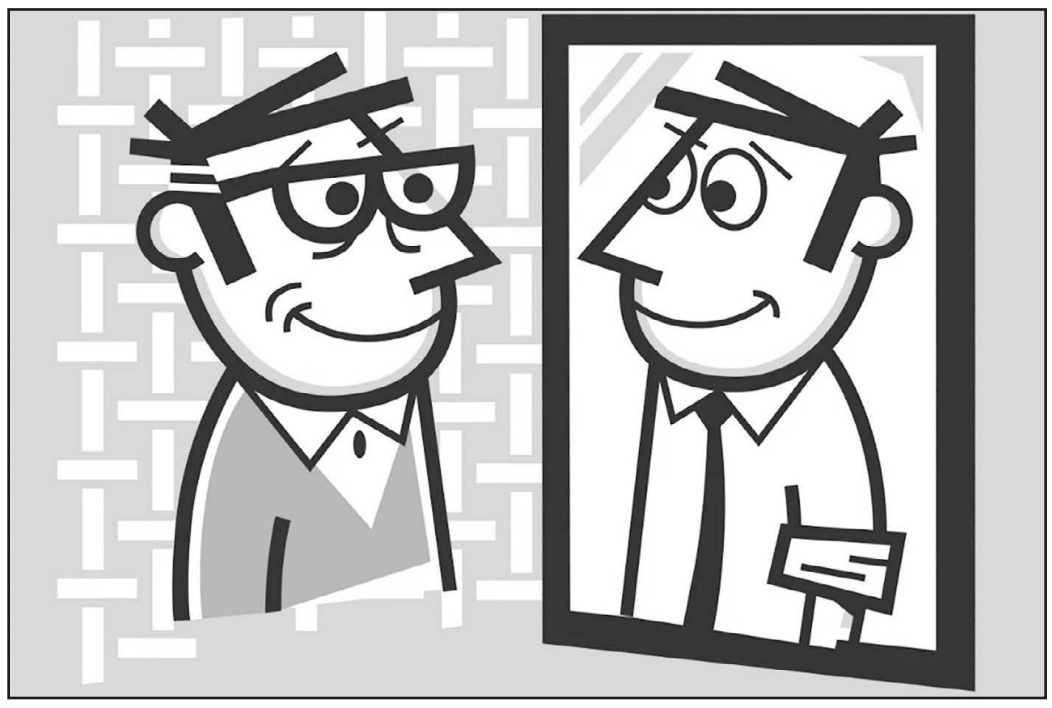
Looking in the mirror each day

Why your perception of 'old' changes as you age

By BRUCE HOROVITZ
Kaiser Health News



(KHN Illustration/Getty Images)

My perception of old age is inextricably linked to my grandmother. When I was a kid, I thought this 65-year-old, white-haired woman whose entire body wobbled when she walked was very old. Now that I'm 66, my personal perception — or perhaps, misperception — of old age has changed. I suspect I've got lots of company.

Many of us are convinced that while everyone else is aging, that person we see in the mirror every morning is magically aging at a somehow slower pace. The age confusion can start early. A 2018 Michigan State University online survey of respondents ages 10 to 89 revealed that most think middle age begins at 30 — and that old age begins at, OMG, 50.

Another study, from the University of Zurich, published in 2011, determined that older adults often try to avoid the negative stereotypes of their age group by distancing themselves from their age group. Yet another study, from Columbia University, in 2018 found considerable evidence that when confronted with negative age stereotypes, older adults tend to distance and dissociate themselves from this negative stereotype.

Call it what you will, but this gray-haired group of boomers and beyond — myself included — is having a hard time accepting the realities of aging. Yes, we are mortal, but we're not quite believing it. The great irony, say experts on aging, is that this flirtation with a slightly different reality from our aging peers may, in fact, be a healthy thing.

"Baby boomers are redefining what aging is and what old age looks like," said Jennifer Ailshire, assistant professor at the Leonard Davis School of Gerontology at the University of Southern California. William Chopik, assistant professor of psychology and principal investigator of the Michigan State study, knows this better than most of us.

"People — particularly older people — usually say they feel younger than they are," said Chopik. "People who report feeling younger actually tend to live longer and healthier lives — and they don't tend to have as much of a pattern of decline."

In most cases, people say they feel about 20 percent younger than they really are, according to the Michigan State study of more than 500,000 people. This keeps ramping up as folks age, he said. Beginning at age 50, he said, many say they feel about 10 years younger.

The fact we're generally living longer than we used to also plays a role, experts say. "As our life spans get longer, so does our view of old age," said Chopik. "How we view ourselves changes constantly as we age."

For me, it's been more like a sentence to self-motivate. At age 66, when I look in the mirror, I may not see a 46-year-old staring back at me — but, perhaps, someone closer to 56. Maybe it's because I'm so lousy at sitting still. I'm out walking my dog at 6:15 a.m., lifting weights in the gym by 7:30 a.m. and swimming laps in the pool before 9 a.m. five days a week. Welcome to my nonstop world that seems to somehow keep old age partially in check.

While it might not sound like your world, consider Theresa Paulus — the mother-in-law of USC's Ailshire — who seems to be constantly in motion, too.

The 63-year-old Tempe, Arizona, resident's morning bicycle workout, alone, makes my daily workout schedule look lame. She's typically up by 5 a.m. and quickly out on her Trek bike for the next hour — or more — on a 10-mile-long excursion. If the weather is lousy, she'll instead find her way to the spinning class at the local gym before heading to the weight room.

"I honestly feel like I'm in my 40s," said the full-time nursing home caregiver, who three years ago, at age 60, got her degree in health service management from Arizona State University. "I haven't slowed down one bit from the exercise routine I did at 40."

In fact, she may have upped it a bit. Not the distance, mind you, but every day she tries to challenge herself a bit. "Each time I ask myself, can I get there and back just a little bit faster?" she said. She may be passing it along to the next generation, too, as she has taught her two granddaughters how to ride bikes.

Paulus' ability to rebound from injuries is legendary among friends and family. On a recent walking tour of Ireland's Cliffs of Moher, she twisted her ankle but continued days of walking — only to discover when she got home that she'd broken her foot. Back in 1969, while training on her bike, she was hit by a car — but escaped without so much as one broken bone. And after a moped accident in 2010, she crushed her leg and was advised by her doctor that she'd always walk with a limp — and a cane. She proved the doctor wrong and was soon racing bikes again.

Her daughter-in-law, USC's Ailshire, isn't surprised by any of this. After all, she said, some baby boomers' bodies can perform as if they are between two and 15 years younger than their actual age.

Paola Sebastiani, 55, is living proof. She barely qualifies as a baby boomer, but when asked how old she feels, the professor of biostatistics at Boston University said she doesn't even feel 40.

Perhaps that's because she walks 2 miles (in Birkenstock sandals, no less) to and from work every weekday. Or maybe it's because she's adamant about eating no red meat and tries to eat avocado daily. Or perhaps it's her who-gives-a-flip attitude. "My mom would have never worn jeans at my age — but I wear them all the time," she said. Her point: Folks with a positive attitude toward aging often age more slowly.

Which brings us back to my dear grandmother. The most familiar smell from her kitchen was that of the fried chicken crackling on the front burner every Friday evening. I can't remember even once seeing her exercise. Action, in her world, was a game of cards. And, as was all too common in her day, she thought her smoking habit helped her to relax.

Is it any wonder she was old at 65?

So, at 66, I've given up on most fried foods. I've never smoked. I don't sit around much playing cards or watching TV. And all the time I spent walking our dog, lifting weights and swimming laps this morning I view as an invisible shield that protects me from looking into the mirror and seeing an old man staring back.

Instead, I still see me.

FDA overlooked red flags in testing of new depression medicine

By EMMARIE HUETTEMAN
Kaiser Health News

Ketamine is a darling of combat medics and clubgoers, an anesthetic that can quiet your pain without suppressing breathing and a hallucinogenic that can get you high with little risk of a fatal overdose.

For some patients, it also has dwelled in the shadows of conventional medicine as a depression treatment — prescribed by their doctors, but not approved for that purpose by the federal agency responsible for determining which treatments are "safe and effective."

That effectively changed in March, when the Food and Drug Administration approved a ketamine cousin called esketamine, taken as a nasal spray, for patients with intractable depression. With that, the esketamine nasal spray, under the brand name Spravato, was introduced as a miracle drug — announced in press releases, celebrated on the evening news and embraced by major health care providers like the Department of Veterans Affairs.

The problem, critics say, is that the drug's manufacturer, Janssen, provided the FDA at best modest evidence it worked and then only in limited trials. It presented no information about the safety of Spravato for long-term use beyond 60 weeks. And three patients who received the drug died by suicide during clinical trials, compared with none in the control group, raising red flags Janssen and the FDA dismissed.

The FDA, under political pressure to rapidly greenlight drugs that treat life-threatening conditions, approved it anyway. And, though Spravato's appearance on the market was greeted with public applause, some deep misgivings were expressed at its day-long review meeting and in the agency's own briefing materials, according to public recordings, documents and interviews with participants, KHN found.

Dr. Jess Fiedorowicz, director of the Mood Disorders Center at the University of Iowa and a member of the FDA advisory committee that reviewed the drug, described its benefit as "almost certainly exaggerated" after hearing the evidence.

Fiedorowicz said he expected at least a split decision by the committee. "And then it went strongly in favor, which surprised me," he said in an interview.

Esketamine's trajectory to approval shows — step by step — how drugmakers can take advantage of shortcuts in the FDA process with the agency's blessing and maneuver through safety and efficacy reviews to bring a lucrative drug to market.

Step 1: In late 2013, Janssen got the FDA to designate esketamine a "breakthrough therapy" because it showed the potential to reverse depression rapidly — a holy grail for suicidal patients, such as those in an emergency room. That potential was based on a two-day study during which 30 patients were given esketamine intravenously.

"Breakthrough therapy" status puts drugs on a fast track to approval, with more frequent input from the FDA.

Step 2: But discussions between regulators and drug manufacturers can affect the amount and quality of evidence required by the agency. In the case of Spravato, they involved questions like, how many drugs must fail before a patient's depression is considered intractable or "treatment-resistant"? And how many successful clinical trials are necessary for FDA approval?

Step 3: Any prior agreements can leave the FDA's expert advisory committees hamstrung in reaching a verdict. Fiedorowicz abstained on Spravato because, though he considered Janssen's study design flawed, the FDA had approved it.

The expert panel cleared the drug according to the evidence that the agency and Janssen had determined was sufficient. Dr. Matthew Rudorfer, an associate director at the National Institute of Mental Health, concluded that the "benefits outweighed the risks." Explaining his "yes" vote, he said: "I think we're all agreeing on the very important, and sometimes life-or-death, risk of inadequately treated depression that factored into my equation."

But others who also voted "yes" were more explicit in their qualms. "I don't think that we really understand what happens when you take this week after week for weeks and months and years," said Steven Meisel, the system director of medication safety for Fairview Health Services based in Minneapolis.

NASAL SPRAY OFFERS PATH TO PATENT

Spravato is available only under supervision at a certified facility, like a doctor's office, where patients must be monitored for at least two hours after taking the drug to watch for side effects like dizziness, detachment from reality and increased blood pressure, as well as to reduce the risk of abuse. Patients must take it with an oral antidepressant.

Despite those requirements, Janssen, part of Johnson & Johnson, defended its new offering. "Until the recent FDA approval of Spravato, health care providers haven't had any new medication options," Kristina Chang, a Janssen spokeswoman, wrote in an emailed statement.

Esketamine is the first new type of drug approved to treat severe depression in about three decades.

Although ketamine has been used off-label for years to treat depression and post-traumatic stress disorder, drugmakers saw little profit in doing the studies to prove to the FDA that it worked for that purpose. But a nasal spray of esketamine, which is derived from ketamine and (in some studies) more potent, could be patented as a new drug.

Although Spravato costs more than $4,700 for the first month of treatment (not including the cost of monitoring or the oral antidepressant), insurers are more likely to reimburse for Spravato than for ketamine, since the latter is not approved for depression.

Shortly before the committee began voting, a study participant identifying herself only as "Patient 20015525" said: "I am offering real-world proof of efficacy, and that is I am both alive and here today."

The drug did not work "for the majority of people who took it," Meisel, the medication safety expert, said in an interview. "But for a subset of those for whom it did work, it was dramatic."

CONCERNS ABOUT TESTING PRECEDENTS

Those considerations apparently helped outweigh several scientific red flags that committee members called out at the hearing.

Although the drug had gotten breakthrough status because of its potential for results within 24 hours, the trials were not persuasive enough for the FDA to label it "rapid-acting."

The FDA typically requires that applicants provide at least two clinical trials demonstrating the drug's efficacy, "each convincing on its own." Janssen provided just one successful short-term, double-blind trial of esketamine. Two other trials it ran to test efficacy fell short.

To reach the two-trial threshold, the FDA broke its precedent for psychiatric drugs and allowed the company to count a trial conducted to study a different topic: relapse and remission trends. But, by definition, every patient in the trial had already taken and seen improvement from esketamine.

What's more, that single positive efficacy trial showed just a 4-point improvement in depression symptoms compared with the placebo treatment on a 60-point scale some clinicians use to measure depression severity. Some committee members noted the trial wasn't really blind since participants could recognize they were getting the drug from side effects like a temporary out-of-body sensation.

Finally, the FDA lowered the bar for "treatment-resistant depression." Initially, for inclusion, trial participants would have had to have failed two classes of oral antidepressants.

Less than two years later, the FDA loosened that definition, saying a patient needed only to have taken two different pills, no matter the class.

Forty-nine of the 227 people who participated in Janssen's only successful efficacy trial had failed just one class of oral antidepressants. "They weeded out the true treatment-resistant patients," said Dr. Erick Turner, a former FDA reviewer who serves on the committee but did not attend the meeting.

Six participants died during the studies, three by suicide. Janssen and the FDA dismissed the deaths as unrelated to the drug, noting the low number and lack of a pattern among hundreds of participants. They also pointed out that suicidal behavior is associated with severe depression — even though those who had suicidal ideation with some intent to act in the previous six months, or a history of suicidal behavior in the previous year, were excluded from the studies.

In a recent commentary in the American Journal of Psychiatry, Dr. Alan Schatzberg, a Stanford University researcher who has studied ketamine, suggested there might be a link due to "a protracted withdrawal reaction, as has been reported with opioids," since ketamine appears to interact with the brain's opioid receptors.

Kim Witczak, the committee's consumer representative, found Janssen's conclusion about the suicides unsatisfying. "I just feel like it was kind of a quick brush-over," Witczak said in an interview. She voted against the drug.

Money believed funneled overseas

U.S. indicts former New Castle prison officers in fraud case

By SCOTT L. MILEY
CNHI Statehouse Reporter

INDIANAPOLIS — Two former Indiana correctional officers have been indicted on federal charges for stealing the identities of unsuspecting inmates to open fraudulent bank accounts and then creating visas, passports and driver licenses.

The men, both of Muncie, allegedly used the bank accounts to funnel money to people living overseas, according to a federal indictment unsealed in U.S. District Court for Southern Indiana.

Both men, Lawrence Onyesonwu, 33, and Martins Chidiobi, 29, previously worked at the New Castle Correctional Facility, which is operated by a private GEO Group of Boca Raton, Florida.

The private company hired Onyesonwu in 2014 and Chidiobi was hired in 2018. Both were fired Feb. 21 of this year.

The men have been charged with federal counts of bank fraud; aggravated identity theft; forgery or the false use of a passport; and fraud and misuse of visas, permits and other documents.

Both men also face charges in Henry County.

Police were alerted in January by a Citizens State Bank representative in New Castle that an account was opened in the name of an inmate.

As officers watched, Onyesonwu showed up at the bank and offered police a Republic of Liberia passport with an inmate's name on it.

Working as a prison transportation officer, Onyesonwu had access to inmates' personal information including dates of birth and Social Security numbers, the indictment states.

After setting up the accounts, the two allegedly used the accounts for wire transfers, withdrawals and outgoing international wire transfers.

Chidibo told police he was directed by Onyesonwu to open accounts, according to the indictment.

Chidiobi said Onyesonwu had someone in Nigeria produce fake documents and send them back.

The men used the phony passports to open bank accounts. Other accounts were opened with Ghana and China passports.

In one case, the men received 15 money orders totaling more than $12,400. Using that same account, they received 16 cash deposits totaling over $44,200.

In total, Onyesonwu made 50 remittances totaling over $70,000 that went to seven individuals living in Nigeria.

In another case, someone using an inmate's name went to Citizens Bank in Pendleton and attempted to withdraw $6,2000 to purchase a vehicle. However, employees at the bank wouldn't release the funds without proper identification.

White House asserts executive privilege in census fight

By MICHAEL BALSAMO and MATTHEW DALY
Associated Press

WASHINGTON — President Donald Trump has asserted executive privilege over documents that were subpoenaed by Congress related to the Trump administration's decision to add a citizenship question to the 2020 census, the Justice Department said Wednesday.

The claim comes as the House Oversight Committee considers whether to hold Attorney General William Barr and Commerce Secretary Wilbur Ross in contempt for failing to turn over the subpoenaed documents.

In a letter to the committee's chairman, Rep. Rep. Elijah Cummings of Maryland, the Justice Department asserted that the Trump administration has "engaged in good-faith efforts" to satisfy the committee's oversight needs and said the planned contempt vote was premature.

Democrats fear the question will reduce census participation in immigrant-heavy communities.

They say they want specific documents to determine why Ross added the citizenship question to the 2020 census and contend the Trump administration has declined to provide them despite repeated requests.

The administration has turned over more than 17,000 of pages of documents and Ross testified for nearly seven hours. The Justice Department has said two senior officials also sat for interviews with committee staff members and it was working to produce tens of thousands of additional pages of relevant documents.

Cummings disputed the Justice Department's account and said most of the documents turned over to the committee had already been made public.

The administration's refusal to turn over requested documents "does not appear to be an effort to engage in good faith efforts to comply" with congressional oversight, Cummings said. "Instead it appears to be part of a policy of defiance of congressional authority."

Trump has vowed to "fight all the subpoenas" issued by Congress and has vowed to refuse to work on legislative priorities, such as infrastructure, until Congress halts investigations of his administration.

"The census is critical to our democracy and it is critical to every single one of our constituents," Cummings said.

Cummings postponed a planned vote Wednesday morning to allow lawmakers time to read the Justice Department letters.

Ross told the committee the decision in March 2018 to add the question was based on a Justice Department request to help it enforce the Voting Rights Act.

Cummings disputed that, citing documents unearthed last week suggesting that the real reason the administration sought to add the citizenship question was to help officials gerrymander legislative districts in overtly partisan and racist ways.

The Supreme Court is considering the citizenship question in a ruling expected by the end of the month.

Some of the documents the committee is seeking are protected by attorney-client privileges and other confidential processes, Boyd said, adding that the president has made a "protective assertion" of executive privilege so the administration can fully review all of the documents.

"The president, the Department of Justice, has every right to do that," White House counselor Kellyanne Conway said on MSNBC. "They're asking for documents that are privileged and I would hope that they can continue to negotiate and speak about what is appropriate and what is not, but the world is watching. This country sees that they'd rather continue to investigate than legislate."

Democrats have accused the Trump administration of failing to comply with subpoenas in an effort to stonewall Congress' oversight power.

The House Judiciary Committee voted last month to hold Barr in contempt of Congress after the department didn't immediately comply with a subpoena to turn over an unredacted version of special counsel Robert Mueller's report on the Russia probe and underlying investigative documents.

Republicans have criticized such hearings as a waste of time and have called for Democrats to move on.

Census begins testing citizenship this week

By TIM HENDERSON
Stateline
stateline.org

As the Supreme Court considers a challenge to a citizenship question in the 2020 census, the U.S. Census Bureau will start testing the question's effect on participation this week.

The bureau announced a test that will go to 480,000 homes, half of which will get the citizenship question. Findings will help determine whether the bureau needs to send out more people to do follow-up interviews if it turns out that the question dampens participation.

The Supreme Court has yet to decide whether the question is allowed, but a majority seemed inclined to support it during arguments in April. The case reached the Supreme Court after the state of New York sued the federal government, saying the question was improperly added, and other states joined the lawsuit.

Opponents and even some internal census research say asking all Americans about citizenship, last done in the 1950 census, would discourage immigrants from participating. High-immigrant states like Arizona, California, Florida and Texas could lose federal funding and seats in Congress if an undercount results.

Question met with criticism from start

From The Associated Press

The citizenship question federal officials are adding to the 2020 U.S. Census has been met with objections from states and cities that fear it will discourage participation and endanger their population-based funding.

Critics say it will add to the challenge facing states gearing up to prevent undercounts in hard-to-count areas, including border shantytowns and other communities with unauthorized immigrants.

The new question was requested in 2018 by former Attorney General Jeff Sessions, who argued it was necessary to get accurate counts of potential voters in order to stop illegal gerrymandering that dilutes the voting power of minorities.

States started filing suit saying it will discourage participation by immigrants afraid of deportation. Last fall, a Census Bureau memo noted that immigrants are increasingly concerned about confidentiality and whether they might be used to target them for deportation.

But the Center for Immigration Studies, which favors less immigration, argues that the new question is not likely to hamper participation. Steven Camarota, the center's research director, pointed out that the census already asks survey questions about citizenship for small samples of people.

Missing family member makes for anxious wait as firemen battle blaze

By MARK CAMPBELL
Courier staff writer

A Jefferson County family waited anxiously for about two hours Tuesday as firefighters battled a blaze that completely destroyed the home of a family member who at the time was missing and thought to maybe still be in the structure.

In the end, Bryan Rice, 52, of near Blocher, returned to his family safely just about the time firefighters from numerous departments extinguished the blaze and were beginning to search the charred rubble for a possible body.

Rice had been visiting a friend in nearby Blocher and was unaware that his home was on fire or that he was unaccounted for. Numerous calls to his cellphone went straight to voicemail and a check with several of his friends failed to locate him, leaving family members and firefighters to fear the worst until he finally returned home.

All that made for some tense waiting for stepfather Roy Suter, who looked on as firefighters worked to extinguish a blaze that was already well out of control by the time they arrived at the scene located just off SR 3 near the intersection of SR 256.

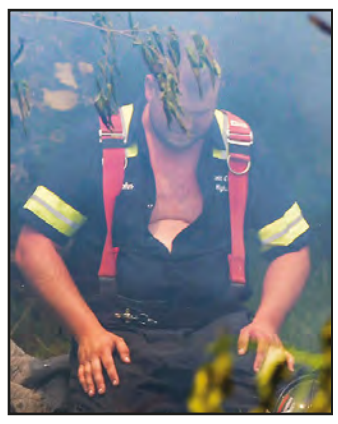
Suter said Rice, on disability since a work-related injury several years ago, normally sleeps late so family members could only hope that he was not still in the home. When he could not be located by phone or friend it was hard not to consider that he might have perished in the blaze.

"We found him. He came home," said Suter, who owns the house. "We're really relieved. You can always build another house."

According to Deputy Fire Chief Michael Hazelwood, by the time the first pumper truck arrived, the structure was fully engulfed. By the time hoses could be run and water flowing, the building was beginning to collapse. That left firefighters with no option for entering the structure for a search or rescue, especially considering that the structure had been built around a previously existing mobile home.

Considering the suspected severity of the fire, a state fire marshal was dispatched to the scene and had already arrived and was interviewing witnesses by the time Rice returned home at about 1:45 p.m., some two hours after the blaze was reported.

Deputy Volunteer Fire Department headed up the response with assistance by firefighters from Hanover, Kent, Johnson Township, Madison Township, New Washington and Scottsburg at the scene. Water trucks from three of those departments also responded making sure the hoses never ran dry during the battle.



Firefighters from Deputy and other departments (above and below) battled a fire near Blocher Tuesday where the occupant was missing until two hours later. Property owner Roy Suter (left) talks with a firefighter about his missing stepson. (Staff photos by Mark Campbell)

2 Dearborn County arrests in steroid case

From Indiana State Police

LAWRENCEBURG — A Lawrenceburg, Indiana, couple was arrested on numerous charges related to the manufacturing, sale, and delivery of controlled substances after a steroid manufacturing laboratory was discovered inside their home.

Cori M. and Nicholas R. Gilbertson

The investigation began in February 2019 when law enforcement intercepted a package containing chemical compounds commonly associated with the manufacture of steroids. That package was to be delivered to a residence in Cincinnati. Law enforcement later determined that the package was ultimately to be delivered from the Ohio residence to Nicholas R. Gilbertson, 35, and Cori M. Gilbertson, 34, who live in Lawrenceburg.

Because the Gilbertson's live in Indiana, the Indiana State Police began an investigation. ISP Investigators served a search warrant on the Gilbertson's residence on March 4. During the execution of the search warrant, troopers located a hidden room concealed behind a bookcase. The room contained a sophisticated steroid manufacturing operation which included a ventilation system. Troopers located items including chemicals associated with the manufacturing of steroids and about 25,000 pills or capsules prepared for distribution.

Additional information gathered indicated that Nicholas and Cori Gilbertson were often paid with bitcoins and often had distributed nearly $80,000 worth of controlled substances a month.

Both Nicholas and Cori Gilbertson were arrested Monday, June 10 on numerous charges of dealing controlled substances, possession of a legend drug and maintaining a common nuisance.

Madison, he said.

With VisitMadison and Hanover College joining the effort, a proposal was submitted, complete with a VisitMadison promotional video. They were notified early last year that Madison had been selected.

The effort before and since the acceptance included Andrew Forrester in the mayor's office and Madison attorney Joe Jenner, who is an assistant baseball coach at Madison and was on the 1999 Cubs team that won the state championship.

Half of the All-Star players are from the northern half of the state and half are from the southern half.

The All-Star Series location is alternated between the north and the south each year. A high school has not hosted the Series on its ballfield since Jasper in 1978 and even that was a city-owned park.

Since then, the games have been played at non-school fields such as colleges and minor leagues.

Gary O'Neal Field is being spiffed-up for all the attention it will get. Armstrong, Mike Modisett — the Madison schools athletics groundskeeper — and others have been preparing the ballfield.

A new scoreboard and new fencing were installed, and the turf is being groomed special.

After the last out of the final game, Armstrong hopes that it isn't the last that Madison will see of those who attended the 45th North-South All-Stars Series.

"Hopefully they will come back sometime, the moms, dads, aunts, uncles, grandparents, brothers, sisters," he said. The Series, he said, "is all about showcasing Madison."

Kate gave us a heads-up on the line-up this year. "July 20 we have Nobody's Business; they're from Salem. On August 17 we have The Rigbys, a Beatles tribute band from Sellersburg. And our final show on Sept. 21 is a repeat band we all love, Small Time Napoleon from Louisville.

"This whole thing started with Jerry Riley, the previous site manager, back in 2009. He brought in the Cincinnati Symphony to play. He kept it going until he left, and we (Friends of Lanier) decided to just pick it up and keep going.

"The mission of the Friends group is to support and raise awareness for the mansion, and there's no better way to showcase the site than with these lawn concerts. It's something unique to do, and I think the town loves it."

A few thoughts about RiverRoots Festival

The 14th annual RiverRoots Music Festival concluded this weekend, marking, I believe, my ninth or tenth year as a volunteer committee member. It's a tremendous amount of work, and it takes a dedicated crew to make it happen.

I don't think I'm exaggerating when I say that this year's festival was probably the smoothest, well-oiled event we've had so far. Of course, there are factors no one can control, like the weather or musicians who change plans at the last minute (I'm talking to you, Todd Snider). But we have this thing down pretty pat, I must say.

Which brings me to my point. I want to strongly encourage all my readers to attend RiverRoots next year, regardless of the weather. In fact, I can pretty much guarantee that it will rain a bit. It does every year.

It will be a few days before we get a full recap on the festival numbers this year, but everyone has already begun plans for next year.

I can guarantee you will have an amazing experience. Every person I talked to— even the damp Chris Knight fans cheering for their man in a light drizzle Friday night — everyone told me how much they love RiverRoots.

And, I'll guarantee you one more thing. It will be even better next year. Mark your calendars now. Second week in June.

HOT TIP OF THE WEEK:

We're starting to get a lot of outdoor music opportunities now that it's getting warmer. The Lighthouse continues to have music on Wednesdays and Saturdays. The Music In The Park series kicks off Friday with country star J.D. Shelburne. The Lanier summer music series starts up this Saturday. And we happily welcome Mad Paddle Brewery to the live music scene with live music every Sunday, featuring Rusty Bladen playing this week on the back patio. Come celebrate Father's Day with some great music and a fresh local craft brew. I'll see you there!

Charlie Rohlfing is a stalwart of the RiverRoots Festival committee, a campfire guitar strummer, and a partner in The Red Bicycle Hall music venue. Former Madison golf state champion Mike Kemper to be inducted by IHSGCA Hall of Fame on Friday

Courier Sports Editor
mcampbell@madisoncourier.com

With 24 sectional titles and two individual state champions, boys golf is one of the true success stories of Madison Consolidated High School sports and now one of the most storied Cubs is being inducted into the Indiana High School Golf Coaches Association Hall of Fame.

Michael Kemper, a three-time sectional champion, two-time regional champ, 1990 state runner-up and 1991 state champion, will enter the hall at a ceremony Friday night in Indianapolis.

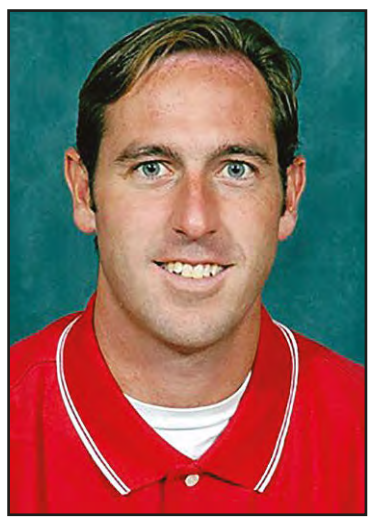
With credentials like Kemper's — he also went on to play on scholarship at Indiana University — the real puzzle is why the honor didn't come sooner.

"I think that my high school resume stacks up pretty well, but you don't take those things for granted. Any time you get the call to go to the hall of the fame you're extremely honored. I feel very fortunate." Kemper said.

Kemper has long thought that his credentials as a high school player warranted induction, but the call never came and one of his best friends — former IU teammate Jody Roudenbush, a previous HOF inductee — offered plenty of good natured ribbing on the subject.

"He liked to give me grief that he was in and I was not, but that will all change Friday," Kemper laughed but then turned more serious. "I look at some of the names that I'm going in with and I'm incredibly humbled. It's names that I idolized as a kid and to be mentioned in the same breath as some of them is incredibly humbling."

Kemper was the top player on the last four of Madison's first five sectional championship teams — consecutive wins under former Madison coach Barry Cooper. It established a Madison culture of sectional and individual domination that elevated the Cubs to sectional favorite status since the late 1980s.



Mike Kemper

His state runner-up finish in 1990 came when the winner, Andy Johnson of Columbus North, drained a 30-foot putt on the final hole to edge Kemper by one stroke.

"I barely qualified my junior year to get out of regional. I had to win a playoff hole to get in. I was struggling," Kemper recalled. "I wasn't putting well for sectional or regional — the playoff was the most nerve-racking golf that I've ever played because I did not think I was going to be able to qualify — but then the week between my regional and the state, I figured something out and I started playing great."

That turnaround and the disappointment of falling on a 30-footer fueled Kemper's competitive fires to come back in 1991 and win it all by four strokes.

Kemper parlayed his brilliant high school career into a golf scholarship at Indiana University where he played for Hall of Fame coach Sam Carmichael. And although his college career was less distinguished than high school, he was still a contributor on a couple of strong Big Ten teams, a team captain for two years and an Academic All American as a senior.

"I'm very happy. I wish my college career could have paralleled my high school career because I was very lucky to have a really good high school career," Kemper said. "I had a great college career but not near my high school career for sure.

"I can't thank Sam Carmichael

USNWT opens Cup with 13-0 rout

By ANNE M. PETERSON
AP Sports Writer

REIMS, France — Thailand was never a real threat to the U.S. national team. Even so, the three-time Women's World Cup champions had no desire to go easy on a lesser opponent in their opening game.

Goals matter in the group stage.

And statements matter in soccer's biggest tournament.

"Obviously we have the utmost respect for everyone we play, but it's the World Cup," said captain Megan Rapinoe.

Alex Morgan tied the tournament record with five goals and the United States opened with a historic 13-0 rout of Thailand on Tuesday night. Samantha Mewis and Rose Lavelle each added a pair of goals for the United States, which broke the record for goals and margin of victory in a World Cup game.

Rapinoe, Lindsey Horan, Mallory Pugh and Carli Lloyd also scored. The previous record margin was Germany's 11-0 victory over Argentina in 2007.

Morgan tied Michelle Akers' record for World Cup goals, set in the quarterfinals against Taiwan in 1991. The team's seven different scorers also set a tournament record.

Lloyd, 36, became the oldest American woman to score at a World Cup and joined Germany's Birgit Prinz as the only players to score in five straight World Cup games.

The United States faced criticism over its relentless attack. The Americans led 3-0 at the break and then broke the match open in the second half, with the players celebrating goal after goal.

The Americans meant no disrespect, said Morgan, but they simply wanted to position themselves for a run at a second consecutive title.

"We really just came into the game really wanting to showcase ourselves," Morgan said. "Every goal matters in this tournament and that's what we were working on."

Asked about the lopsided score, U.S. coach Jill Ellis wondered if a 10-0 victory in a men's World Cup would elicit the same questions.

"This is a world championship, so every team here has been fantastic to get to this point. And I think that to be respectful to opponents is to play hard against opponents, and as Alex said, it's a tournament where goal differential is important," Ellis said.

The two teams were the last to kick off in the group stage for the monthlong tournament. Host France opened the World Cup before a sellout crowd in Paris on Friday night with a 4-0 victory over South Korea.

Ranked No. 1 in the world, the Americans had dropped only one match in their previous 38, a loss to France in Le Havre in January. The team was 7-1-2 overall this year, with six straight wins going into the World Cup.

The last time the Americans played in the sport's top tournament, Lloyd had a hat trick in the first 16 minutes and the United States beat Japan 5-2 in Canada for the trophy.

The U.S. pounced early against Thailand, too, on Morgan's header in the 13th minute off Kelley O'Hara's precisely placed cross. Mewis, Lavelle and Horan were all making their World Cup debuts.

"When you get a deluge of goals like that, it's a good feeling," Ellis said. "It builds confidence."

Thailand, ranked No. 34 in the world, was clearly outmatched even though the team has shown progress on the world stage. Making its World Cup debut in 2015 four years ago, Thailand finished third in its group but earned its first win, a 3-2 victory over Ivory Coast.

At the final whistle, Lloyd and Christen Press were seen consoling the Thailand goalkeeper. Morgan put her arm around Thailand's Miranda Nild, who was wiping away tears on the field. Nild and Morgan both played college soccer for the California Golden Bears.

"They were disappointed of course, they intended to make an impression in this first match and they were disappointed," coach Nuengrutai Srathongvian said through a translator. "Yes, they are all athletes and they will be resilient. We've got two more games to play and we need to bounce back."

Srathongvian said soccer in Thailand is still growing and there is a limited pool of players to draw from.

The World Cup comes at a time when female players across the globe are seeking better treatment, conditions and pay. The U.S. national team has long championed equal rights, and players collectively filed a lawsuit earlier this year that alleges discrimination by the U.S. Soccer Federation and are seeking pay equitable with that of the men's national team.

The players say the lawsuit is on hold while they're in France. But a pair of prominent well-wishers on Twitter referenced the team's pursuit of equality.

"The @USWNT is something to smile about. It was great to celebrate with them back in 2015 and I'm excited to root them on in their drive to earn their fourth star. Best of luck to these champions for equality, on and off the field," wrote former President Barack Obama.

Tennis legend Billie Jean King weighed in: "The pursuit of a record 4th World Cup trophy for the #USWNT officially begins today, but the journey has been years in the making. You have the support of a nation behind you. Get that win, and then get the equal pay you deserve!"

Ellis made some lineup moves for the match in the absence of defender Becky Sauerbrunn, whom the team said was held out as a precaution with a minor quad injury. Julie Ertz was moved to the backline and Mewis got the start in the midfield.

Morgan, U.S. Soccer's 2018 Player of the Year, now has 106 international goals. Playing in her third World Cup, she was named player of the match.

It came close to the team's biggest rout ever. The U.S. beat the Dominican Republic 14-0 in a 2012 Olympic qualifier in Vancouver, British Columbia.

Up next for the U.S. is World Cup newcomer Chile on Sunday in Paris. In the final group match before the knockout round, the Americans will travel to Le Havre to face nemesis Sweden, who they've been grouped with six times in World Cup play.

In the last meeting between the teams, Sweden ousted the United States in the quarterfinals at the 2016 Olympics. Afterward, former U.S. goalkeeper Hole Solo called Sweden "cowards" for bunkering on defense. Alyssa Naeher has since replaced Solo, who was dismissed from the team.

Sweden defeated Chile 2-0 earlier on Tuesday in Rennes, a match that featured a 40-minute weather delay.

Single in 10th lifts Indians over Reds

CLEVELAND (AP) — Rookie Oscar Mercado hit a bases-loaded single with one out in the 10th inning, leading the Cleveland Indians to a 2-1 victory over the Cincinnati Reds in the intrastate matchup Tuesday night.

Mercado lined a 1-2 pitch from Raisel Iglesias (1-6) to left field and was mobbed by his teammates after rounding first base.

Mercado was doused with water buckets as he did a postgame interview in front of the dugout.

Mike Freeman drew a one-out walk and took third on a single by Leonys Martín. Francisco Lindor was intentionally walked, setting the stage for Mercado.

Mercado, who was called up from Triple-A Columbus on May 14, hit a tie-breaking home run off CC Sabathia in a win over the New York Yankees on Saturday.

Brad Hand (3-2) pitched two scoreless innings and struck out the side in the 10th.

Cleveland has won five of seven on its homestand, taking two of three from Minnesota and the Yankees.

Indians starter Trevor Bauer allowed one run in 7 2/3 innings and threw 118 pitches. Red starter Luis Castillo allowed a solo homer to Carlos Santana in the fourth and struck out six in six innings.

Bauer walked Derek Dietrich with two outs in the eighth and was replaced by Oliver Pérez. Pinch-hitter Kyle Farmer singled to deep short and Nick Wittgren retired Yasiel Puig on a fly ball to right.

Bauer worked out of a bases-loaded jam in the seventh that started with a double by Puig. Bauer issued one-out walks to José Iglesias and Tucker Barnhart — the No. 8 and No. 9 hitters.

Bauer fielded Nick Senzel's tapper in front of the mound and threw home to start an inning-ending double play. Catcher Roberto Pérez stepped on the plate and threw to first, retiring Senzel.

Bauer pumped his right fist and jumped over the third-base foul line on his way to the dugout.

Senzel had an RBI double in the fifth.

Cleveland loaded the bases with one out in the sixth, but Castillo struck out José Ramirez and Jake Bauers.

Santana hit a one-out homer in the fourth, his 15th.

David Hernandez entered the game in the eighth for the Reds and struck out five of the six batters he faced.

enough," Kemper said. "Sam could have given up on me numerous times when I was a freshman and sophomore but he never did. He gave me shot after shot after shot and kept working with me and working with me and finally the summer between my sophomore and junior year it finally began to click and I did have a really good junior and senior year. I was fortunate enough to do some really cool things … I will forever be grateful that he didn't give up on me."

Kemper's Hall of Fame nomination came from former Madison athletic director Jim Lee, a long-time supporter and former official at the IHSAA Sectional. Kemper said knowing he had Lee's endorsement makes it even more humbling.

"Mr. Lee sent me a really long and very heartfelt email telling me that he just didn't feel like he could make the trip up for the induction. But what he sent me was really heartfelt and a very, very thoughtful note. It brought tears to my eyes, both to myself and my parents," Kemper said. "He's been a huge part of my success and somebody that I obviously plan to mention on Friday night in my speech. He's someone who has meant a lot to myself and my family as I grew up in Madison. We've always had a good bond whether it was high school basketball or golf or even baseball as I was growing up. He's just been very influential and a great person."

Kemper said he couldn't have gotten where he's at without mentors like Lee and Carmichael but that the real stars are his parents, Gary and Susie, for the way they supported and encouraged him on this journey.

"I have to give a lot of credit to my dad. I think I got a lot of his and my mothers' athletic abilities and he instilled in me at an early age a competitive streak," Mike Kemper said. "He was a bit hard on me growing up as a kid. But he was 100 percent behind me because he wanted me to be the best and be the best athlete that I could.

"At the time it was a little bit hard to take, but it wasn't overbearing. He was just pretty strict. He was regimented. He got me to spend a lot of time on my craft and that kind of stuck with me," Kemper added. "I was just fortunate enough to have a father — and mother — two people who cared so much about seeing me be successful. That was for sure the number one thing that they provided. They gave me every opportunity to be successful and for that I will be forever indebted to them. There was not any tournament or anything that I wanted or needed to be better, that they would not do. They gave me every opportunity to be successful and I feel like when I was a kid I took advantage of that and that got me to where I could get the scholarship to IU and got me noticed when I was in high school. Everything that I have and everything that I was able to become in golf, I owe to my mom and dad."

Kemper said golf is a costly sport with the equipment, fees and travel and he was lucky to have parents willing and able to fund him but even more fortunate to have parents who could and would invest the time and effort needed for him to play competitive golf.

"It's an expensive sport but we were fortunate that my dad had the means to provide the financial backing for me but the time that both of my parents had to put in to get me to these places for tournaments all around the country to get noticed by college coaches was a huge deal."

Kemper majored in criminal justice in college thinking he might follow his father's footsteps into law but after graduation he went into the golf industry for several years as both a teaching pro at the Martinsville and Otter Creek golf clubs and as an assistant coach at Indiana University. He eventually took a job in dental equipment sales where he discovered golf provided a foundation for lucrative sales as he used his golf skills to make friends and close deals both on and off the course.

Kemper said it was an acquaintance at IU who introduced him to sales right at a time when he was getting a little burned out with teaching and coaching after six years as a golf professional. He took the job and has never looked back.

"He offered me a job and I took the job and 20 years later the rest is history ... I've done so much on the golf course as far as closing deals and taking my doctors out and trying to get business from them. It's been a vehicle for me to make money," Kemper said.

Kemper continues to play competitive tournament golf as a amateur and since golf is a lifelong sport, he doesn't see that changing any time soon.

"I play quite a bit. I'm fortunate I have a sales job in medical supplies and I do a lot of my business on the golf course and I play a bunch of national tournaments," he said.

Kemper still has good relationships with a couple of his college teammates and they travel and play tournaments together and have a couple of wins to their credit.

While everything was pretty much stroke play and match play in college, Kemper now leans toward four-ball play. It's a game that feeds his competitive fires, while also leaning heavily on teamwork and camaraderie.

"I'm now playing against 20 and 25 year olds and the older I get the nicer it is to have a partner to play with for his sake and my sake both," said Kemper, now 46 and a father of two girls. "Every shot counts when I play by myself but it's nice to play where if you have a bad hole you just pick it up and let your partner finish out. It's a totally different mindset. My partner makes a lot of birdies and bogeys and doubles and I make a lot of pars so we complement each other well."

Kemper's best non-competitive round ever is still a blistering 11-under 61 at Sunrise Golf Course in his early 20s but his best competitive round was as recent as 2008 when he carded a third round 68 in the State Amateur at Wolf Run Golf Club in Zionsville.

And while Kemper hopes to keep playing golf for many more years, he knows it's also the time to start giving back like his parents did before him. His oldest daughter, 9-year-old Madison, is taking her first lessons this summer.

"My 9-year-old is just taking lessons this summer so she's showing a smattering of interest. Golf's such a lifelong sport that I sure hope they play golf. Even if they don't play at a high level I hope they play," Kemper said of his children."The things you can do — like going out and playing with your buddies on Saturdays or getting together with my friends from college and going on golfing trips — what else can you do like that at age 46? You're not likely to go out and play pickup basketball. It's a sport you can enjoy for life and it's really helped me in my business. I'm really fortunate that my parents chose and pushed me toward a sport that I could play for life."

This year's Hall of Fame banquet will be at the Golf Club of Indiana in Indianapolis. Kemper will be inducted along with Jamie Broce, a state champion as a freshman in 1992 and state runner-up as a senior in 1995 from Ben Davis who went on to play for Ball State. Broce is the current head coach at IUPUI and one of the top amateurs in the nation.

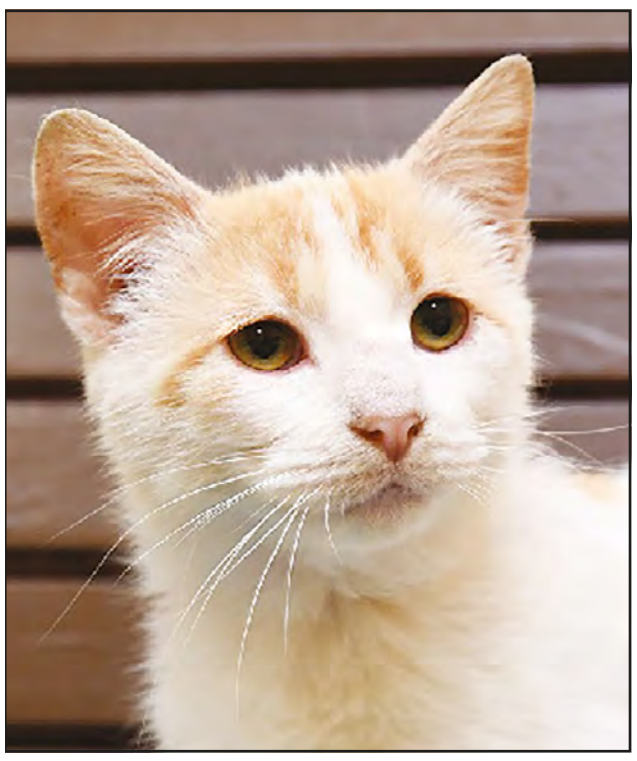
PETS OF THE WEEK



LITTLE BIT

Little Bit has come a long way from being a trapped cat. He was covered in ticks, but is much better now. Little Bit is a sweet but shy one- to three-year-old male who loves catnip toys and gets along with other cats. Little Bit is a staff members' favorite cat and she helped him trust again. He is neutered and is up-to-date on his rabies vaccination. Little Bit is just $45 total to adopt.

The Madison-Jefferson County Animal Shelter currently has 11 dogs or puppies, and 27 cats or kittens available. Pictures of additional pets waiting for adoption can be viewed at www.sisaveapet.com

Normal shelter hours are Monday, Thursday and Friday from noon to 5 p.m., Wednesday from 1 p.m. to 7 p.m., Saturday from noon to 4 p.m., and Sunday from noon to 3 p.m. It is closed Tuesday. The shelter number is (812) 273-1788 and the email is animal.shelter39@jeffersoncounty.in.gov

All cats and kittens are $45 off unless they are already spay or neutered. Discount is courtesy of the Animal Shelter and the Jefferson County Humane Society.

Volunteers are always welcome at the shelter. Individuals must be at least 16 years old to volunteer. Volunteers can help with everyday cleaning, answering phones, and exercising the pets. Contact the shelter for details.

The shelter is a registered organization with the Kroger Community Rewards program. To support the shelter, register a Kroger card at www.krogercommunityrewards.com and enter FL919.

Support the shelter while walking your dog. Use the "Walk for a Dog" or "WoofTrax" app available through the App Store or Google Play. For each mile walked, a donation is made to the shelter.

A list of needed items can be found on the shelter website. Donations can be mailed to 2727 Hannah Drive, Madison, IN 47250 or dropped off during shelter hours. The shelter also accepts aluminum and steel cans, which are recycled and the proceeds put toward the medical fund. Recent donations have helped get treatment for a beagle with a skin infection and a cat with wounds. The shelter asks that aluminum and steel donations be separated. Steel cans should also be rinsed before they are dropped off. Cans can be dropped off at anytime in a bin located on the east side of the shelter.

Those with missing pets can stop by the shelter, call or email a complete description of the pet, when and where it was last seen, the owner's name and contact information, and a picture of the pet. Pets are held for three days before they are made available for adoption.

Animals should not be abandoned outside of the shelter or dropped off at the shelter after hours.

For animal control issues in Madison, call (812) 265-3347. For animal control issues in Hanover and Jefferson County, call (812) 265-2648.

NICOLE

Nicole is a unique, sleek black cat who would be a great house pet. She is great with other cats and would be best in an indoor home that she can call her own. Nicole is spayed and is up-to-date on her rabies vaccination. She is just $45 total to adopt.

Volunteers needed to clean Ohio River Saturday

Jefferson County is seeking volunteers to participate in this Saturday's Ohio River Sweep.

The annual river bank clean-up extends the length of the Ohio River, which involves 981 miles, six states and 72 counties. Jefferson County has participated in the sweep since 1989.

Litter in waterways is a global problem and the Ohio River Sweep connects people to the Ohio River while encouraging stewardship of this important resource. This event is family-friendly and children can help clean as well.

The clean-up here will begin Saturday, June 15 at 8 a.m. at the Regatta Judge's Stand on Vaughn Drive. To volunteer, fill out a waiver form beforehand or at the meet-up location Saturday. Waivers are available online at www.orsanco.org

Each year, nearly 22,000 volunteers participate in the River Sweep and litter is removed from more than 3,000 miles of shoreline. Over the years in Jefferson County, volunteers have removed furniture, carpeting and tires.

Volunteers are asked to wear clothes that can get dirty and closed-toe shows. Trash bags, gloves and free T-shirts will be distributed at sign-in.

BRIDGE

WHEN FAVORABLE, BID ONE MORE

Seneca the Younger, an ancient Roman playwright and philosopher, wrote, "A sailor without a destination cannot hope for a favorable wind."

At the bridge table, finding the right destination -- final contract -- usually produces a favorable score. But sometimes an opponent can make getting to that contract nigh impossible.

In the given auction, the first three bids were clear-cut, South's three-heart cue-bid showing game-going values with club support. Then, West might have bid three spades; but when he passed, North temporized with three spades. He knew that his partner did not have four spades (he would have made a negative double over two hearts), but it gave South the opportunity to rebid three no-trump with a heart stopper.

West led the spade king (not a psychic low spade). South ducked a couple of spades, took the third, crossed to his hand with a diamond and ran the club queen. He ended with nine tricks: one spade, one heart, three diamonds and four clubs.

One East followed the principle that with a respectable suit at favorable vulnerability, bid one more than usual. When East overcalled three hearts, South felt that his hand was too promising to settle for three no-trump. He cue-bid four hearts, which led to a final contract of five clubs. East led the heart king. West ruffed away dummy's ace and shifted to the spade king. North had to lose two hearts and two clubs (the ruff and the king) to go down two.

Area student attending Governor's School for the Arts

Olivia Morgan, a student from Trimble County High School, has been chosen to attend the annual Kentucky Center Governor's School for the Arts this summer along with 255 other young artists from every region of the Commonwealth. This year's school will take place at the University of Kentucky in Lexington from June 23 through July 13.

This will be the first year that the University of Kentucky will host the school. During their three-week stay, students from 52 counties will be immersed in a rigorous schedule of daily seminars, master classes, lectures, hands-on workshops and field trips to regional arts attractions.

Instruction will be offered in nine disciplines: architecture and design, creative writing, dance, drama, film and photography, instrumental music, musical theatre, visual art and vocal music. Morgan will be attending GSA to study vocal music.

Since 1987, more than 6,000 high school rising juniors and seniors have attended the summer program. The program will end on July 13 with an all-day festival celebrating the achievements of Kentucky's young artists. Additionally, 30 colleges and universities currently offer scholarships to alumni of the school.

The school is a public/private partnership started in 1987 by The Kentucky Center, The Commonwealth of Kentucky and numerous private supporters. Today, the vital funding required to make the school a reality is provided by the state through the leadership of the Governor's Office and the Kentucky Tourism, Arts and Heritage Cabinet, as well as The Kentucky Center Endowment Fund, Toyota Motor Manufacturing and more than 300 corporations, parents, educators, alumni and friends of the school.

Companies clueless on need for bereavement time off

Annie Lane

Dear Annie: My daughter was 14 weeks pregnant when the baby died. The nurse midwives, who were wonderful, sent her home to have the miscarriage and told her it could take up to two weeks to "be complete."

I was surprised and extremely saddened by how she was treated by her supervisor at work. She is a professional engineer, and when she called her supervisor to explain why she would not be coming into work, she was told she could have three sick days, but after that, she would need to take vacation time. REALLY? And this was another woman.

After my daughter and I discussed the situation, she applied, and was approved, for benefits from the Family and Medical Leave Act, but the mental damage had been done. To all of us, this was a child. My daughter had known she was pregnant for more than three months, and, as a mother, was devastated when her baby died.

As the grandmother, I also called my office to explain the situation — that I would be staying with my daughter, and I was told by my supervisor that she would put me down for vacation/sick time, and, if need be, for me to call back and she would change it to bereavement. Again, REALLY? When I called back several days later to say the baby had come and we were planning a funeral and burial, my time off was changed. But again, why did it take two phone calls and a second extended explanation?

What is wrong with people? Shouldn't we both just have been told how sorry they were and what, if any, paperwork would need to be filled out? How can the death of a baby be a vacation? — Surprised and Saddened Grandmother

Dear Grandmother: I am so sorry for the loss of your grandchild. I can feel how much you and your daughter loved this baby. You are 100 percent correct that her employer and your supervisor should have been much more sensitive to both of you. Try not to allow their insensitivities to further your pain. Clearly they have not experienced such a loss and don't know the depths of your sorrow.

Now is the time for you and your daughter to surround yourselves with warrior women — women who have experienced a similar loss and know what it feels like to live in a world where you lost a baby or a grandchild. This child would want you both to feel loved and comforted. Heal for the baby.

There are readers who are reading this letter with tears in their eyes, sharing your grief. Go and hug your own daughter a little tighter today. Tell her that she, too, is strong and will survive this terrible loss.

Dear Annie: This is in response to "Educated by Others." I'm a retired teacher with 31 years of being in a wonderful profession. I used to tell my classes at the start of each school year that when you talk, you teach. When you listen, you learn. Just another view. — Always a Teacher

Dear Teacher: Thank you for your insightful tip for not only students but also those of us who are students of life.
